What is Mental Illness? How Common is it?

Mental illnesses are medical conditions that disrupt a person's thinking, feeling, mood and ability to relate to others. They often result in a diminished capacity for coping with the ordinary demands of life. Serious mental illnesses include major depression, bipolar disorder, schizophrenia, major anxiety disorders (including obsessive-compulsive disorder), posttraumatic stress and borderline personality disorder.

- One in four adults—approximately 57.7 million Americans—will experience a mental health disorder in any given year.
- One in 17 adults lives with a serious mental illness, and one in 10 children have a serious mental or emotional disorder.
- Major Depression is a persistent illness characterized by despair and hopelessness that affects one's thoughts, feelings, behavior, mood and physical health.
- Bipolar Disorder is a medical illness that causes extreme shifts in mood, energy and functioning and is characterized by episodes of mania and depression, which may vary greatly over a person's life.
- Schizophrenia is a serious mental illness which interferes with a person's ability to think clearly, distinguish reality from fantasy, manage emotions, make decisions and relate to others.
- Obsessive Compulsive Disorder (OCD) is an anxiety disorder characterized by obsessions, intrusive or irrational thoughts and compulsions - repetitive rituals such as hand washing or double-checking, which are experienced for more than an hour each day, in a way that interferes with a person's life.
- Posttraumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD) is an anxiety disorder characterized by continually re-experiencing a profoundly traumatic event; avoiding individuals, thoughts or situations associated with the event; and demonstrating symptoms of excessive emotions.
